This is an introductory course focusing specifically on the areas where competition law intersects with labour law. It is aimed at anyone wanting a good understanding of which forum has jurisdiction in the event of overlapping disputes, and how labour and employment issues are dealt with by the competition authorities.

There is a significant intersection between labour law and competition law in South Africa. This is most evident in merger transactions, particularly where retrenchments are contemplated, but can also arise in other labour and employment contexts, including no-poaching agreements and restraints of trade.
