A comprehensive examination of the legal frameworks governing international financial institutions (IFIs) such as the African Development Bank, Bank for International Settlements, Group of 20, Financial Stability Board, International Monetary Fund, Paris Club, Trade and Development Bank, or the World Bank.

The course delves into these institutions' significant yet often overlooked influence on stabilising economies, promoting development, and managing sovereign debt crises. Explore the legal foundations, governance structures, and the regulatory mechanisms through which these institutions operate. Through case studies, policy analysis, and critical discussions, participants will assess the impact of IFIs on the global financial system, developing countries, and international economic law. The course also explores current debates on IFI reforms and their role in addressing global challenges such as climate change, poverty reduction, and financial crises.

The course is aimed at legal practitioners, legal advisers, policymakers, economists, academics, researchers, and students with a focus on international and financial law as well as development aid.
